Chamber's Note

Locked inside our homes, sandwiched between Freedom Day and Workers Day, this moment provides a unique opportunity to reflect on some of the great achievements of our country, many of which have for now been put on ice. The connection between the two days is obvious. One of the ways people exercise their freedom is to earn a living for themselves. In turn the living we earn allows us to do more, thus expanding our scope for freedom.

Several more intricate discussions exist around topics of free trade, freedom of association and workers' rights. While there is a common dichotomy drawn up in government circles between economic and public health, there is a glossing over of a third major sacrifice that South Africans are presently having to make – we are giving up our freedoms. Amongst these civil liberties currently being suspended are the rights of workers to organize freely, freedom of association and the ability to engage in trade in a free market.

In this moment workers have very few options to act collectively in order to ensure their rights are upheld. Encouragingly however Business for South Africa has shown itself to be proactive in terms of ensuring the readiness to protect the country's workers as the country gradually switches the economy back on. The spirit of collaboration between business and labour speaks to a often ignored synergy between workers rights and business prosperity.

The Chamber will continue exercising its freedom to debate, disseminate information and collaborate with organizations such as our members and B4SA, albeit at a distance. While there is widespread consensus that the post-Covid world will be different, it is up to us to ensure that it does not become less free
